INTRODUCTION OF THE STUDY

A Capital market is a financial market in which long-term debt instruments or equity market instruments are bought and sold, or markets in a money market where short-term debt is bought and sold. Capital markets channel the wealth of savers to those who can put it to long-term productive use. Such as companies or governments, including long-term investments, financial regulators like Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI), Board of Capital Markets and the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), oversee capital markets to protect investors against fraud, among other duties.

Transactions in capital markets are generally managed by a board within the financial sector or the treasury departments of governments, and corporations but they can be created directly by the public as an example, in the United States, very successful savings with an interest connection can be made as account with treasury

Direct and use of to buy bonds as the primary market, though tends to concentrate on only a tiny fraction of the total volume of bonds sold.

PRIMARY MARKET

When a company wants to raise money for long-term investment, one of its first decisions is whether to do so by issuing bonds for shares. If it chooses, it avoids increasing its debt and in some cases the new shareholders may also provide non-monetary help, such as expertise or useful contacts. On the other hand, a new issue of shares will dilute the ownership rights of the existing shareholders, and if they gain controlling interest, the new shareholders may even replace senior managers.

SECONDARY MARKET

Most capital market transactions take place on the secondary market. On the primary market, each security can be sold only once, and the process to create batches of new shares or bonds is often lengthy due to regulatory requirements. On the secondary markets, there is no limit to the number of times a security can be traded, and the process is usually very quick.
